

COPYRIGHT TO STANDARDS

PSK Standardisointiyhdistys ry (PSK; aka PSK Standards Association and PSK Standardisointi) is the owner of the copyright to PSK standards. The standards are copyright protected works. Permission from PSK is required even if only part of the standard is copied for work purposes or preparing thereof according to rules set below.

PSK's member companies

The member companies have the full right to use and copy standards for their own use. Copying of standards is not recommended, for example, for the purpose of adding them as attachments to invitations to tender or other documents. It is not permitted to hand over to any third party a package of standards given to a member company in an electronic format such as a CD/DVD disc or USB memory. Right to use and copy is valid during the membership.

PSK's client companies

PSK's client companies are non-member companies, which purchase standards in separate editions. The client companies may copy standards for their internal administrative use such as engineering, research and internal communications. The amount copied must not exceed half of the standard or 5 pages. It is not permitted to copy standards, for example, for the purpose of adding them as attachments to invitations to tender or other documents.

Companies providing educational services

Member companies providing educational services are permitted to use standards in their educational purposes. They are permitted to copy up to one quarter or two pages of the standard in delivered training material.

Member schools and educational institutes

Staff and full-time students during their studies of member schools and educational institutes have the full right to use and copy standards in their operations related to study and research.

In addition to rules above

The original information and designations related to PSK and copyright have to be clearly visible even in partial copies of PSK standards.